Entrepreneurship is the most powerful economic force known to mankind! The “entrepreneurial revolution” that captured our imagination during the last decade has now permeated every aspect of business thinking and planning. Examples of Sam Walton’s Wal-Mart, Fred Smith of Fed Ex, Bill Gates of Microsoft and Michael Dell of Dell Computer are ever present in our student’s lives. The twenty-first century of today presents newer and sometimes more complex challenges than ever conceived, however, the entrepreneurial drive and determination of our yet to be discovered “dynasty builders” will be our greatest solution.

Successful entrepreneurship requires more than merely luck and money. It is a cohesive process of creativity, risk taking, and planning. Our students today need courses and programs that set forth a basic framework for understand the process of entrepreneurship.

The Illinois Institute for Entrepreneurship Education (IIEE), in cooperation with Millikin University’s Regional Entrepreneurship Network, brings this 3-day teacher training for integrating entrepreneurship and technology into the classroom because we recognize the need our students will have to understand the engine of our economy and to have a better understanding of the world of work in which they will soon be participating.
